OWC rolls out USB 2.0 display adapter for Macs and PCs

By Donald Melanson posted Apr 29th 2009 5:16AM

It's hardly the first product of its kind, but we're guessing there's still plenty of folks out there ready to jump on OWC's new USB 2.0 display adapter, which will let you add up to six monitors to your Mac or PC. As with similar products, however, you will be slightly limited in terms of resolution, with the adapter topping out at 1600x1200 for standard monitors and 1680x1050 for widescreen displays, although you will get full 32-bit color and, of course, your choice of mirrored or extended display settings. What's more, in addition to the main USB to DVI adapter, you'll also get a DVI to VGA and a DVI to HDMI swivel adapter right in the package, plus a regular USB cable -- all for $99.

What the USB Skype Mouse is all about...

SHARE

Your computer mouse. Your Skype phone. Two absolute computer essentials – there's no doubt you need them both. What you don't need, is any extra clutter on your desktop (and by clutter we don't mean your USB Missile Launcher, USB Pole Dancer, USB Cup Warmer or any other of our awesome USB products – they're definitely on the "can't do without list"). Now you can kill two must-haves with the one USB Skype Mouse!

To the uninitiated, it looks suspiciously like your normal USB optical wheel mouse and does exactly what you want your mouse to do. But when you flip the lid – you reveal a ready-to-go Skype phone with back-lit LCD screen. It works with the common Skype service, allowing you to make free calls to other computers with a VoIP (Skype) set up and of course cheap-as calls to landlines and mobiles (just check the rates with Skype).
